Representing Immigrant Defendants in New York
Fourth Edition (2006)

by Manuel D. Vargas
Immigrant Defense Project of
New York State Defenders Association

Nearly 20 percent of the residents of New York State are foreign-born, according to the U.S. Census, and many of those residents are not naturalized citizens. The new 2006 edition of Representing Noncitizen Criminal Defendants in New York offers detailed, practical, straightforward, and up-to-date information for criminal defense attorneys about:

- Potential immigration consequences of specific New York dispositions for noncitizen clients.
- Strategies to pursue in trying to avoid adverse immigration consequences in New York criminal cases.

In addition to a well-organized explanation and analysis of the relevant law, this volume includes 11 appendices for quick reference.

"...This book is designed to take the information that is now inescapably necessary and put it in front of us. We can give cogent answers to client and family questions. We know in advance whether that perfect plea agreement carries with it the fact of exile from home and family. . . ."
